In Africa, a Mood of Desperation U.S. Awaits

By John Darnton

New York Tunes Sarrice OUAGADOUGOU, Burkina Faso -You don't have to be a detective to spot the decline in living standards in Africa.

The decline can be seen in the shanty-behind the rest of the world. It is now the only continent where most poor people are getting still poorer and where health and education are deteriorating.

As political changes similar to those that shook Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union four and five years ago now reverberate in Africa, Africans seem more concerned about the social and welfare problems caused by the economic decline. Their views emerged during scores of interviews in the course of a six-week trip through nine countries in East. West and southern Africa.

The statistics roll by in a blur. More than four million children born this year will die before the age of 5. Nearly a third of the children are severely malnourished.

One in three goes without any schooling. But it is the individuals who remain fixed in memory. One is a baby without a name, less than 24 hours old. He was born at the Central Hospital here, brain-dam-

U.S.-Ukraine Deal: Boon or Boondoggle?

By Raymond Bonner and James Bennet New York Times Service

KIEV - When an American company ventured into Ukraine last year with a deal to sell $70 million worth of corn seed, herbicides and expensive harvesting equipment, the move was hailed here and in Washington as a historic vote of confidence in this struggling nation and a model for cooperation between American businesses and former Communist countries.

Now, a year later, the deal looks like a model of a different sort, an embarrassing instance in which American companies took advantage of a country in turmoil to dispose of poor quality seed that it could not sell in the United States and to reap large profits.

"It's a very black page," said David Sweere, chairman of the agriculture committee of the American Chamber of Commerce in Ukraine. "There was a time when the Ukrainian farmer held the American farmer in very high regard. Now, they have lost respect for us because of deals like cial gain. But if that is your only goal, then this is what happens.

Some farms planted the seed and got no crops. At harvest time, most of the new combine harvesters included in the deal never moved from their sheds. And while the American seed company and brokers have been paid, Ukraine is struggling to repay the $70 million to Citibank, which inanced the deal.

If the country fails to repay the money, the United States Export-Import Bank, which guaranteed the loan, will have to repay it and the cost will be borne by U.S.

Ukraine, with its rich black soil, some of the world's best, and a seed shortage, seemed like an ideal setting for Zeneca Inc., a company in Wilmington, Delaware, that was looking for new markets.

The deal looked just as good to Ukraine. The American products were supposed to allow it to produce a corn crop of at least a million tons, which would bring in $70 million and pay for the seeds and equipment in a year. But the seeds that were planted yielded only about 10,000 tons of corn, according to a Ukrainian audit.

The details on how this happened are scarce. But based on the Ukraine audit, Zeneca documents and farmers and officials in Ukraine and the United States, a picture emerges of a deal gone wrong. The American companies and Ukrainian officials who knew the most, however, declined to answer many questions, gave answers that contradicted one another or defended the deal.

"We gave them the best we had," said Karl Sherman, a lawyer for Zeneca, which is an American subsidiary of Zeneca. Group Ltd., of Britain, a large international pharmaceutical and agricultural products company that was part of imperial Chemical Industries Pic of Britain.

Ian Kaplan, who helped coordinate the deal through his international commodities trading company in Miami, said in a telephone interview that the seed sale "was a win-win for everybody."

His family's company, Trans-Chemical Corp., received an $800,000 commission, according to a Zeneca document, and a

Carter Says He Believes Agreement Is Complete And That 'Crisis Is Over'

By Paul F. Horvitz

WASHINGTON - After high-level talks at the White House, Jimmy Carter said Sunday that the United States and North Korea were in "complete agree-ment" on averting a confrontation and that a vote on international sanctions was eing "held in abeyance."

But the former president said a rapprochement would not be possible until written assurances were received from President Kim Il Sung of North Korea's offer to freeze its nuclear program.

The former president said he would personally seek those assurances. He said he was confident that the North Korean dictator would "honor all of the commitments he made" and that it would be readily apparent if there were violations.

Mr. Carter provided no further insight into the timing or circumstances of a summit meeting that the presidents of North and South Korea agreed to on Saturday. South Korean officials started preparations Sunday for the summit meeting by forming a task force to make contacts with Pyongyang, Agence France-Presse reported from Scoul.

Mr. Carter said he believed that "we have reached complete agreement between us on the major issues, clearing the way for early talks between the United States and North Korea.

"I personally believe that the crisis is over," he said.

U.S. officials gave no indication Sunday of disagreement with Mr. Carter's view, and it appeared that a genuine breakthrough may have occurred. They expressed satisfaction with Mr. Carter's dipomatic opening, pending official verification, but stressed that promises by the North must be followed up with action.

An American Hero's Fall Has Admirers Wondering

By Joel Achenbach Washington Post Service

At a crowning moment of his life, O.J. Simpson made a vow. He was being inducted into the Pro Football Hall of Fame in 1985, surrounded by other football greats. No one could doubt that Mr. Simpson richly deserved enshrinement; he had been a brilliant, breathtaking, recordbreaking runner. But Mr. Simpson said to the crowd. "You don't know what it is to walk around here. You wonder do you belong with this group of guys. "I will live up to the honor of being in this hall and being on your team."

The vow is shattered. O.J. Simpson is now an accused killer, under suicide watch in police custody.

Something went hideously wrong in the life of this American idol. The police say Mr. Simpson brutally murdered two people with a knife. They say he stabbed to death a young man and cut the throat of his former wife, mother of his two young children, the ones he would comfort days later at her funeral. Mr. Simpson has denied the charges, and his lawyer has pleaded with the public to "reserve judgment" until a court of law decides his fate. Every fan of Mr. Simpson's will be struggling to understand how this could

China Executes 3 for Tourist Deaths

BEIJING (AP) — Hoping to patch up relations with Taiwan, China on Sunday executed three men charged with robbing and murdering 24 Taiwanese tourists on a Chinese pleasure boat, official reports said.

The killings on March 31 plunged China-Taiwan relations to their lowest level since the two sides opened trade and tourism links in 1987. Chinese officials initially had said that the fourists were killed in an accidental fire, but later charged three suspects.

The Xinhua press agency said the men were executed Sunday after a sentencing rally attended by 1,200 people in Hangzhou, in eastern China. It said they had pleaded guilty to charges of robbery and murder, and state-run television said they were executed by gunshot. In Taiwan, relatives of the victims said they were not satisfied because many believe unofficial reports that Communist soldiers were involved in the killings.

Worries Rise Over Health Care Gridlock

WASHINGTON -- As the struggle for health care reform enters a critical stage, one of the most powerful pressures on Congress is a possibility that was simply unthinkable here-until the last few weeks: that there might not be a major health care bill this year.

Such an outcome is still not considered likely, and it is dismissed out of hand by Democratic leaders in Congress. But lawmakers and lobbyists involved in the struggle are increasingly worried about the possibility of gridlock - and

This concern is becoming an important part of the sometimes frantic legislative endgame that has begun in recent days: the pleas for a compromise from many Democrats and some Republicans; the finger-pointing over who is causing the impasse; the willingness of many Democrats on the House Ways and Means Committee to transcend internal disagreements and vote for a measure they do not love just to keep the legislative effort alive.

It is part of the emotional backdrop for the early whip-cracking by Democratic leaders, who vowed last week that both houses would take up a health care bill even if it meant

Failure to pass a bill before the fall elections is a risk that must now be weighed by everyone involved - Democrats,

Republicans, liberals, conservatives and, perhaps most of all, the White House — as they decide how much to give in bargaining over health care, and when.

Bill Clinton and his fellow Democrats in Congress will be blamed by the voters if the health care drive collapses.

For their part, many Democratic Congressional leaders and White House strategists still hold that, in the end, the average member of Congress - Democrat or moderate Republican - will vote for a major health care bill once it

Congress and Whitewater

The knack of New York Republican Senate Republicans supported over-Senator Alfonse M. D'Amato for uniting Democrats must make him the envy of the White House. For the better part of a week, Senate Democrats have joined forces to beat back partisan attempts by Senator D'Amato and his Republican colleagues to get political mileage out of the Whitewater affair. The wrangling is over the terms of the Banking Committec's pending Whitewater probe.

The Republicans complain that the agreement, reached along party lines, to limit public hearings to phases of the Whitewater probe completed by special counsel Robert Fiske is to abandon Congress's constitutional oversight responsibilities. They also charge that the narrowly focused probe is a flagrant attempt by Democrats to go bail for Bill Clinton. Their passion notwithstanding, the Republicans' charges don't hold much water. The terms of the Banking Committee probe meet the spirit of a March 17 resolution in which the Senate voted 98-0 that the hearings should be structured and sequenced" in such a manner that they do not "interfere with the ongoing investiga-tion" of the special counsel. Mr. Fiske's position that Congress should allow the special prosecutor to proceed without risk of congressional hearings compromising either his work or the grand jury process lay at the heart of the resolution, which whelmingly. It is that intent that Senator D'Amato et al. are now trying to annul.

By the end of this month, the initial phases of Mr. Fiske's probe covering the investigation of the death of Vincent Foster, the White House deputy counsel, the handling of his papers by White House officials and Whitewater-related communications between White House and Treasurv officials will be finished. These are the areas to be examined by the Senate Banking Committee. Interestingly, without going through the Senate's machinations the House agreed to impose similar limits on its own Banking Committee. To denounce the present structure or the sequencing of hearings as a cover-up is wrong.

While the proposed hearings will cover events in the Clinton presidency, the Senate majority leader has given assurance of additional hearings on issues that cover the Clintons' political and business lives before the White House. It is no abdication of Congress's oversight responsibility to be mindful of the pitfalls of simultaneous probes. Congress ought to avoid hearings that might interfere with prosecutorial efforts to compile admissible evidence leading to convictions. Iran-contra taught that lesson. Why the rush? The Clintons aren't going anywhere. Senate Democrats should hold firm.

Rebelling Against Disney

Disney's America, the planned theme park in northern Virginia, has inspired something rare in these shallow times: impassioned debate among intellectuals and a surge of preservationist zeal in the Congress. Hooray! It would be a crime against the national heritage if the country's best historical thinkers and its legislators slumbered through this desecration of historic ground. There is a time when a nation must listen to its scholars. A veritable panthe-on of historians and writers — C. Vann Woodward, John Hope Franklin, James McPherson, Shelby Foote, Barbara Fields — has formed a group called Protect Historic America to oppose Disney's plan to build a 3,000-acre park only four miles from the Manassas battlefield.

Twenty members of Congress introduced a resolution on Thursday objecting to the project. Led by Representative Michael Andrews, Democrat of Texas, they echo these distinguished thinkers in rebelling against a state's right to sell out a national treasure. "It's not just a Virginia issue," Mr. Andrews said. We agree. Virginia's Legislature and governor have betrayed their state's tradition as guardian of the most important collection of Colonial, Revolutionary and Civil War sites in the nation.

Listen to C. Vann Woodward on what could be lost to the motel-hamburgercondo sprawi that would ripple out from the park. "This part of northern Virginia has soaked up more of the blood, sweat other area of the country. It has bred more founding fathers, inspired more soaring hopes and ideals and witnessed more triumphs and failures, victories and lest causes than any other place in the country. If such a past can render a soil 'sacred,' this sliver is the perfect venue."

The congressional resolution affirms this sentiment, and calls for Disney to find another site. Disney executives, and some shortsighted commentators, say that since Disney already owns the site, it is too late to stop them. That is silly. Zoning and land-use planning are established functions of government. Disney's ability to close real estate deals does not give it the right to develop willy-nilly.

There are millions of acres elsewhere more appropriate for such a project and where Disney can exercise its creative freedom. The only limits are its executives' own taste and their threshold of embarrassment. But no one should fall for the assertion of the Disney chairman, Michael Eisner, who was on Capitol Hill on Thursday saying that "there is no basis for which the federal government should be involved" in challenging his plans.

A little history lesson on what central overnments rightly do would be helpful here. Ulysses S. Grant, who campaigned through much of Virginia, created the first national park on March 1, 1872. Thus the man who saved the Union with victories in the field saved Yellowstone for the ages by defining the principle that Washington must intervene to preserve places of unique value to Americans.

Now the challenge is different. Few pristine natural areas are left, but Grant's principle still applies to areas of special historical, environmental or scenic value. On Tuesday, Senator Dale Bumpers, Democrat of Arkansas, chairman of the Public Lands Subcommittee, will hold hearings on the Disney project. He and his colleagues should begin the legislative work of defining a new designation, the National Historic Region, to protect critical sites and the areas around them.

to bar Disney's plans to destroy the historic countryside where Robert E. Lee raised his army. That is the teaching of the nation's historians.

"I sat through many history classes where I read some of their stuff," Mr. Eisner said to The Washington Post of these scholars, "and I didn't learn anything." So it would seem. The argument for federal intervention cannot be made any more clearly than Mr. Eisner did with those words.

Other Comment Of D-Day and Historical Fact

As the D-Day commemoration approached, some of my younger colleagues wondered what all the fuss was about. I think perhaps they now know. Hearing the veterans tell their stories, America's young have time and again expressed not only admiration but also something approaching shock, as if they hadn't had a clue. And indeed many hadn't.

A young colleague assigned to write stories about the D-Day commemorations told me her high school exposure to World War II had been limited to the Helocaust, the changing role of women and the interning of Japanese-Americans. These are all important subjects, but why not also D-Day? The answer is that the pedagogical emphasis had shifted from the memorization of "dry facts" to learning "critical thinking" (as if the two were somehow mutually exclusive). But thinking based on what? Opinions without facts are plentiful - and worthless.

In studying the importance of D-Day, the critical thinkers of the baby boom generation, of Generation X and beyond could speculate on the consequences of a failed invasion. Consider the Holocaust. A prolonged war would have meant many fewer survivors.

The failure of D-Day might also have bolstered the German armies in the East, slowing the Russian advance. Some anti-Communists might have applauded that, given what turned out to be the postwar fron Curtain, but it would have at least delayed the liberation from the murderous Nazis of many small towns. Among them was Volozhin, in what is today the Republic of Belarus. There, almost all of my maternal European relatives perished before the Russians arrived in July 1944. It was only then that my cousin Simcha Perski and other partisans could safely emerge from the nearby forests into the ruins of the town to try to pick up the pieces of their shattered lives.

The lesson of the D-Day commemorations is that objective and irrefutable facts do exist - and matter, in very profound, important and lasting ways.

Yes, Integrate Europe, but Don't Weaken Its Nations

PARIS — The 20th century's most original and successful attempt to overcome the destructive consequences of nationalism is the European Union. Nationalism's domination of recent history has provoked three liberal and two totalitarian attempts to establish a new international order. The totalitarian ones were communism and Nazism. The liberal ones have been the League of Nations, the United Nations and "Europe." The League collapsed. The United Nations is not in a particularly reassuring condition — doing much that is useful and admirable but remaining in all large matters the creature of the major powers. 'Europe" promised to be something different, but it is in retrogression today. There were elections for the European Parliament this month, and the most striking aspect of those elections was the absence of any serious European dimension. There was no issue of Europe-wide interest or Europe-wide discussion. The elections settled nothing for Europe. These were simply national votes on national issues. Turnout was low, a reflection not only of the poverty of the debate but of the powerlessness of the European Parliament, which has oversight authority over the Union budget

The results were of a slight rightward shift in the Parliament's composition.

By William Pfaff

due mainly to the success of Helmut Kohl's Christian Democrats in Germany, the collapse of the Socialists in Spain and the approval that Silvio Berlusconi continues to be accorded in Italy. This shift has no European significance. It merely reflects domestic political considerations in the countries concerned.

The only pan-European issue the elections touched upon was whether Europe should become more or less closely integrated, on the model provided by the Maastricht treaty of 1992. On that, the outcome was unreadable. There was an electoral fiasco for the Tories in Britain, despite a high level of hostility in that country to Maastricht's integration goals. A new anti-European-integration movement was a notable success in France, but the established pro-European forces had an overwhelming majority of the votes.

Of the right-wing parties frankly hostile to Europe, the Republicans in Germany failed to win a single seat. The Belgian National Front progressed in terms of votes cast; the French National Front regressed. None of this was for other than national political reasons.

The fact that there still are no pan-European parties, campaigns or even tangible issues in these European elections demonstrates that Europe as such is not a political entity either in fact or in the minds of European voters. Yet the European leadership in Brussels presses on with its program of integration, in the apparent belief that a European nation can be brought into existence through the enlargement of structures of administration and cooperation. This seems a very great mistake: No one can quite define what a "nation" is, since it can be so many different things. but it is above all a consciousness.

The most eminent of contemporary British students of nationalism. Hugh Seton-Watson, wrote that after a lifetime of study he was driven to the conclusion that a nation exists when it has first come into existence in the minds of a sufficient number of people - when they consider themselves to be a nation and behave as if they are one.

That may seem a tautological defini-tion, but it is much like that of the 19th century French scholar, Ernest Renan: that "will" makes a nation. A nation "is a moral consciousness." While the people who make up the European Union today certainly possess a moral consciousness of belonging to European civilization and to an intimate confederation of West European liberal nations, they do not possess what can be called a national consciousness as Europeans.

On the contrary, their consciousness of political attachment remains that of individual nationhood. This coexists with their sense of European commitment. The two simply are different things. People know themselves to be Europeans. and they also know themselves to be firmly and distinctively Dutch or Italian or Spanish or French.

The genius of the European movemen! until now has been that it respected this distinction and division of attachments and loyalty. Its error since the Maastricht negotiations has been to assume that the one should and could supplant the other. The importance and endurance of mational reality has not been respected.

The nation-state has for more than two centuries proved the most effective available instrument by which societies have organized themselves and found security. and economic and social political progress. The European Union as originally conceived integrated nations without at-tacking their individual integrity. More recently it has become a confused effort to replace nationhood and a constructive nationalism with something that has been neither clearly defined nor shown to be capable of functioning. The consequence is that "Europe" is in a crisis, inviting a return of destructive nationalisms.

The North Koreans Wanted a Bomb and Doubtless Now Have It

WASHINGTON — I testified in open session before the U.S. Congress in the spring of 1992 that the best estimate of the American intelligence community was that the North Koreans would have a nuclear device within six to 18 months. The worst already had enough fissionable material to make a weapon. We are now well beyond the time frame of our estimate and it is highly probable that North Korean already has one or two nuclear devices. Bluntly put, it is too late to case, I said then, was that they stop the North Korean bomb. Our only option now is to come to grips with that reality and try to prevent the North from expanding its nuclear arsenal and selling nuclear material, designs and even weapons to the highest bidders among other rogue states. Iran, which has bought North Korean ballistic missiles, and Libya likely will be first in line.

Diplomatic efforts to date have proceeded on the assumption that the North Koreans were pursuing their nuclear program as a bargaining chip in order to secure economic benefits and diplomatic recognition for their isolated, faltering regime. This assumption has been wrong from the start. In reality, Kim Il Sung has relentlessly pursued his nuclear weapons program, because he believes that possessing a bomb is the best means to guarantee the continued existence of his regime. as long as they have a nuclear weapon, other countries cannot intimidate them militarily or pressure them to go down the fateful path of liberalization. A nuclear capability gives North Korea an edge in Asia. It will have to be taken into account in its own right, not just as a withered appendage that will one day revive when joined with the South.

So the carrot-without-the-stick strategy of American diplomacy has failed. There is a myth in the United States that if you offer foreign miscreants the hope of prosperity and membership in good standing in the family of nations, they will abandon whatever malign objectives they might have. It may be true for some, but is not not for others - including Iraq and North Korea.

Playing on well-meaning U.S. naïveté, the North Koreans have been stalling for time so that they could proceed to develop their nuclear capability. Their warm reception of former President Jimmy Carter is simply a continuation of manipulation and exploitation of earnest American good intentions, to gain more time and forestall American action.

Three dangers arise from North Korea's likely possession one or more nuclear devices: • The most certain danger is that the regime will sell nuclear material, equipment, weapons designs or even a device itself, just as it has sold ballistic missiles. North Korea is a determined proliferator-for-cash.

• Another danger over the longer term is that Pyongyang will provoke a nuclear arms race in Northeast Asia. Among the successes of U.S. nonproliferation policy over the years was persuading Taiwan and South Korea to forgo nuclear weapons programs. As the North develops its nuclear capability further and eventually acquires a credible delivery system for the weapons, it will bring great pressure on Taiwan, South Korea and Japan to build lent deterrent.

• The least likely danger is that the North will actually use the device in Asia.

The current proposals being pressed in the UN Security Council by the Clinton administration - phased sanctions and a voluntary arms trade embargo - will have little or no impact. Sanctions will not do the trick. As Washington comes to grips with the reality of a nuclear North Korea, the only option now available is to stop its arsenal from growing any larger. Unless America is willing to rapidly deploy forces in a matter of weeks, as it did in the buildup ing window will close. Once the cooled fuel rods have entered the reprocessing plant, a military attack on that plant would risk at least some nuclear contamination.

A unilateral U.S. attack on a North Korean reprocessing facility would bring opprobrium from across the world, especially in Asia. In the Gulf War, the West had strong Arab allies and a preexisting act of aggression by Iraq. Allies in Asia do not seem willing to go to war, or watch America do so, over what is to them the abstraction of nonproliferation.

U.S. options are very limited and all unpalatable. In terms of limiting Pyongyang's arsenal and proliferation potential, the most effective course would be a warning to the North not to begin reprocessing its recently extracted nuclear material, a forewarning to America's friends in Asia that it will allow no further reprocessing, and then destruction of the reprocessing plant if the North goes ahead. Washington would need to do some fast political and military will not it must fall back on measures that will be more gestures than effective actions. This would include doing what it should have done more than a year ago: reinforce U.S. military capabilities in South Korea so that the Northknows that America is not intimidated by the possibility of an attack and that it has the option of striking, in one way or another, if they fail to come to terms with demands that they build no more weapons and sell no devices or their components.

There is also room for diplomacy, backed by military power, and for covert action to blunt North Korea's effort to transfer nuclear weapons and technology.

The odds of any of these actions being effective are not very good. But Washington now has few good alternatives, and none that stand a chance of stopping the North, other than hitting the reprocessing plant and taking our (and the South's) chances with a retaliatory ground attack.

The lack of credible options at this stage should leave a lesson for the future: America must not again underestimate the intentions of rogue nations. An Iraq or North Korea cannot be cajoled or bribed into abandoning policies that offer the means to maintain or expand their own power. They understand only strength. Unless they believe that the United States can and will use its strength, there is little chance of influencing them.

A miclear North Korea is the price paid for this lesson.

U.S. Diplomacy Has Been Confusing By William Clark Jr.

WASHINGTON — Several major flaws in the Clinton administration's foreign policy are now aligned on one problem. There is a lack of coordination as attempts are made to come to grips with North Korea's suspected program to develop nuclear sults before they happen and when the responsibility for them lies elsewhere. Signals are sent that confuse both Americans and foreigners. In trying to gain support for United Nations sanctions, the Clinton administration found in its soundings of Security Council members that a number of key players were unwilling to go nearly as far as the president had hoped. In response, the United States said it would seek a phased sanctions approach or form a sanctions coalition outside the United Nations if the Security Council failed to pass a sufficiently tough resolu-trade or conduct financial transactions with North Korea. Nor does it fly regular flights to the country or engage in arms or technology transfers with it. So if a

Washington will have to persuade others to take on these tasks. Only four countries have anything approaching significant trade or financial relations with North Korea — China, Japan, South Korea and Russia. At least one of the four, China, is likely to block any Security Council initiative or ignore its terms. Russia seems reluctant to go along with the U.S. proposal, saying that it was not properly consulted.

Japan is failing to be firm in halting cash flows to North Korea that reportedly approach $1 billion a year. Even South Korea has so far been reductant to cut off trade with the North which runs 9 to 1 in the South's favor. One wonders then who will form the proposed sanctions coalition.

It will be even more difficult to shut down North Korea's arms trade with Iran, Iraq and Syria, since none of these countries is known for its willingness to cooperate with the United States,

At the best of times, America's policy on North Korea would be difficult to implement. The Clinton administration has made the chances of success even more remote by failing to consult its sanctions "partners" fully, particularly China and Russia. A basic rule of diplomacy, ignored at peril, is that failure to consolidate support for a multilateral position prior to its announcement will usually doom the initiative. Furthermore, it puts the credi-bility of the United States on the line before the policy has begun to solidify. A credibility gap results from the frequent appearance of zigs and zags in policy course. Perhaps if Bill Clinton were to rummage around in the White House storeroom, he might find the small sign that graced the desk of President Ronald Reagan. It read: "It is amazing what you can accomplish if you don't care who gets the credit."

Add to these problems the confused signals being sent to Pyongyang by Washington, For-mer President Jimmy Carter has just returned from talks with Kim Il Sung, held with the evident blessing of the Clinton administration. As a result of the confused and confusing outcome of this visit, would Mr. Kim, ensconced in an isolated country and viewing the world through his cult of personality, be worried about sanctions, or would he think that things were going very much in his favor?

Taken cumulatively, and especially in dealing with such a sen-sitive matter as North Korea's nuclear program, these failings in U.S. foreign policy coordina-tion are dangerous. They weaken chances of inducing Pyongyang to accept outside inspections of its nuclear facilities.

At the same time, stroking the ego of Kim Il Sung encourages perceptions that could lead to serious miscalculation on both the North Korean and American sides. In a poker game every card is important, and this is a very high stakes hand.

By Spurgeon M. Keeny Jr.

WASHINGTON — As the centerpiece of its "counterproliferation" plan, the Clinton administration has proposed a $25 billion anti-ballistic missile system to defend U.S. troops abroad and U.S. allies from nuclear attack. The remote chance of such an assault does not merit this vast expense, and building the system may well weaken the global nonproliferation effort.

To build support for the defense system, which would include 3,000 and-based anti-ballistic missiles the administration has concocted a highly misleading litany of national security threats.

In late 1993, Les Aspin, then secretary of defense, set the tone with the assertion that "more than a score of countries — many of them hostile to the United States, its friends and allies - now have or are developing nuclear, biological and/or chemical weapons and the means to deliver them."

But America's only adversaries - other than China and the former Soviet republics, which have long had the ability to strike the United States - are Iran, Iraq, North Korea, Libya and Syria. A defeated Iraq will not be a threat for the foreseeable future. Only North Korea presents a current threat, and its actions in recent days continue to show that it may well be willing to trade its nuclear program for a new eco-with the outside world. To add credibility to the notion that a few small, weak states are a major threat, the administration has embraced the dubious concept of the "undeterrable" state. But even fanatical, paranoid regimes

nomic and political relationship are deterred by the prospect of catastrophic consequences. Saddam Hussein invaded Kuwait because he had reason to believe that America would not intervene, but he refrained from using chemical or biological weapons because of his fear of the consequences. It boggles the mind to think that these minor adversaries will deter the United States from pursing its role in world affairs unless the United States has a a major new anti-missile system. After all, America stayed the course against the threat of tens of thousands of Soviet nuclear weapons, even though during most of the Cold War there was no defense whatsoever against ballistic missiles. The price of the proposed mis-sile system should be measured not only in dollars but also in the potential damage to the goal of nonproliferation. To deploy the system, Washington would have to drastically modify the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty. This would create a gaping loophole, permitting the deployment of systems with substantial strategic capabilities and inviting the Russians to deploy their own defense system.

This would undoubtedly prevent further reductions in strategic weapons below the levels required by the second START treaty, could possibly derail the treaty itself and could dissuade Britain, China and France from reducing their small strategic arsenals. These reactions would be widely interpreted as proof that the focus on the anti-missile system signals that it has concluded that the nonproliferation treaty, the recently completed Chemical Weapons Convention and quiet diplo-macy are ineffective in stemming proliferation. These perceptions would seriously undercut prospects for the indefinite extension of the nonproliferation treaty.

Contingency planning is a necessary military activity, but it should be done quietly. Worstcase scenarios should not stampede policy decisions. If the nonproliferation regime falters and many countries start developing nuclear arsenals, there will be ample time to react

If the United States is not prepared to act overseas without a shield against remote contingen cies, it should not become involved in the first place. Far more Americans would be killed by conventional arms than by ballistic missiles, and the likelihood that an adversary would use nuclear missiles against U.S. troops is extremely remote. Money for the Pentagon's coun terproliferation program could be far better spent on the international nonproliferation effort and on helping the former Soviet states to dismantle their nuclear weapons. What should the world conclude about U.S. priorities when it realizes that over the next 20 years America's spending on the proposed missile system would be 100 times its begrudging contri-bution to the IAEA's nonprolifer-

WHAT THEY'RE READING • Pierre Sauvage, director of "Weapons of the Spirit," a movie about the rescue of Jewish children from Nazi-occupied France, has just read "Eichmann in My Hands" by Peter Z. Malkin. "I thought it was profoundly moving. To imagine people whose families had been victimized by this man participating so many years later in his capture is extraor-dinary and very touching." (Barry James, IHT) devised a writing style of ostensibly flat sentences that managed to keep wild events and disorderly sentiments just barely in line. Here he is in 1930, age 26, writing a "Brief Biography" of himself:

blowy uplands of Columbus, Ohio, in a district known as 'the Flats' which, for half of the year, was partially underwater and during the rest of the time was an outcropping of live granite, rising in dry weather to a height of 200 feet. "This condition led to moroseness, skepticism, jumping when shots were fired, membership in a silver cornet band and, finally, a system of floating pulley-baskets by means of which the Thurber family was raised up in and lowered down from the second floor of the old family homestead."

And here he is in 1956, contemplating being put in a mental institution or nursing home after "rais-ing hell on Third Avenue, breaking up Nixon rallies and other subver-

"Right now my classificationization chart reads as follows: 'Sex, male. Age, going on 62. Color of moods, grayish black. Height, inde-terminate because of ducking. Occupation, sympathizer with lost or unnonular causes."

Thurber was born in 1894, and to mark that fact Michael J. Rosen has put together "People Have More Fun Than Anybody: A Centennial Celebration of Writings and Drawings by James Thurber."

But why should a centennial celebration be a batch of previously uncollected leftovers? This book should send fond and curious readers back to "The Thurber Carnival," a much better anthology, and to "My Life and Hard Times," a memoir filled with farcical, slightly ghoulish tall tales about growing up in a family and city that were always trying to be normal and always failing.

Rosen's modest though entertaining book could also spur publishers to do better. What about a real critical anthology with Thurber's stories, drawings, letters and journalism; excerpts from "The Years With Ross," his thrust-and-parry account of life

Thurber liked to bite. Why is this book called "People Have More Fun Than Anybody"? The piece these words occur in makes pabulum of them, with Thurber reasoning that "no animals except the human being try to destroy their own species, and this in itself proves that anybody has more fun than people."

Thurber's supply did include ingratiating whimsy and linguistic ing. But he never uttered a platitude like this with a straight face or a loving heart.

Thurber's drawings of ten accompanied his stories, but they appeared on their own, too. His car-toons are filled with hapless middle-class people who have sloping foreheads, receding chins, lots of flesh and almost no discernible body parts. Their eyes are dots, their mouths are lines, their noses are beaked or bulbous.

Once a woman declared that her infant son could draw as well as Thurber and sent him an example. He replied: "Your son can certainly draw as well as I can, The only trouble is he hasn't been through as

But he had been warning readers since the 1933 preface to "My Life and Hard Times" that to call writers like himself (or Dorothy Parker and Robert Benchley) humorists was to miss "the nature of their dilemma and the dilemma of their nature. The little wheels of their invention are set in motion by the damp hand of melancholy."

Rosen selects: the drawings that make up "The (Cold) War Between the Sexes," and "A Suite of Drawings on Matters Psychiatric and Otherwise." The writing in this collection is lively but minor. On the whole Thurber is behaving too well here, folding the damp hand of melancholy and the high hand of wit too neatly in his lap.

to three hearts. Mrs. Edith Sacks of Manhattan, as South, received a club lead and captured East's jack with the ace. It was not clear whether this was a singleton or a lead from length. She faced the possibility of a loser in each suit, and made the only play that offered the chance of avoiding a trump loser: She led the heart queen. This was a triumphant success, for it pinned East's jack.

The queen was covered with the king, and the ace and jack completed an honorable trick. Now she chose a safe road to 10 tricks by crossing to the diamond ace, linessing the heart eight and drawing the last trump. This would have pro-duced a useful overtrick if West

That would have established the clubs, preparing for eventual dia-mond discards, without giving up diamond control. Past Joins Present in Algeria Conflict

By Jonathan C. Randal
Washington Post Service
ALGIERS — The insurgents of Algeria favor butcher knives for their executions. They use school children as messengers and scouts. Where they can, they ban newspapers, cigarettes and liquor.

On the other side, government security forces cordon off neighborhoods, using hooded informers to search homes and arrest suspects. They kill at random, often insisting that the bodies of their victims remain in the streets to deter what officialis condemned as terrorism.

Algerians, now in the third year of a stalemated conflict between a secular regime fighting for its life and Muslim militants determined to set up an Islamic re-public, have been here before. As if the violence that has claimed some 4,000 lives in the last two years was not depressing enough, Algerians see in the present bloody struggle a mocking remake of their glorified war of independence against French colonial rule a generation ago.

For a long time, most Algerians dismissed this comparison as the wrongheaded and spiteful work of foreigners. Their irritation was directed especially at the French, who remain a useful whipping boy for Algerians 32 years after the war of independence ended.

But now conversations with Algerians young and old frequently get steered back to the war against France. They often contain detailed insights into its various phases and how they repeat — or differ from — the present violence.

The president of the Algerian Human Rights League, an outspoken critic of both sides in Algeria's unrest, has been assassinated in his office, the police said.

Witnesses said several armed men had shot the victim, Youssef Fathallah, 64, and then escaped on Saturday. The police provided no immediate information about the killers, and no one claimed responsibility.

Mr. Fathallah, a retired lawyer, was elected head of the Human Rights League in 1991. The independent association has criticized abuses by both sides in the conflict, which began after the government canceled an election that Muslim fundamentalists were widely expected to win.

Balladur to Youth: Tell Me About It

By Alan Riding

New York Times Service
PARIS — Alarmed by the disenchanted mood of many French young people, Prime Minister Edouard Balladur has devised an unusual way of trying to bridge the generation gap. He is asking 9 million youths between the ages of 15 and 25 to tell him how they feel about home, school, work and society in general.

A questionnaire is being sent to millions of French homes inviting youths to give their reactions — total or partial agreement or disagreement — to 58 statements, ranging from "I feel comfortable in this society" to "I would like to receive more love from my parents."

The government, with a presidential election coming up next year, hopes the responses will enable it to identify what has led so many young French to lose faith in the future. "I want youth to express itself so that together we can build tomorrow's France," Mr. Balladur said in a letter presenting

The initiative was born of the display of youthful discontent in March when tens of thousands of students took to the streets complaining that they had been betrayed by a law allowing employers to pay young people less than the mini-

Outside the industrialised west, no-one has to be told to respect their elders. It's simply the way society is organised.

Which is why WWF - World Wide Fund for Nature tries to work with older people in the villages of the rainforests. With WWF's help, they learn to teach the younger members of their communities about conservation. In Kafue Flats, Zambia, it's Chief

In Ban Klong Sai, Thailand, we invoke the Venerable Papasro Bhikkhu, seventythree year old chief Buddhist monk.

This isn't just expediency, it's how WWF believes conservation projects should be run.

Before you teach someone, we believe you have to learn from them. We spend years visiting village after village, talking to the people, listening to them, living with them, understanding how they live their lives.

Only then are we able to gain the confidence of the village elders.

Once they realise we're on their side, our elderly converts promote conservation with a zeal that belies their years.

"Uncle" Prom (68), another of our Thai community leaders, tells us that he frequently gets scolded when he starts telling people in the market that they should leave the forests alone. But he gets results.

Uncle Prom and his fellow villagers recently managed to prevent a new logging concession, and set up a community forest where tree felling is now forbidden.

Ninety-three year old Chief Hamusonde also makes things happen.

Income from the Kafue Flats game reserve in Zambia is funding a school, a clinic and new water boreholes for the local villages.

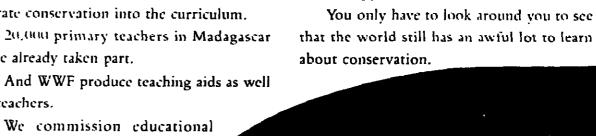

In Madagascar, seventy-eight year old Chief Bakary's village makes a profit by selling fruit grown in their new tree nursery.

More importantly, Chief Bakary's village now takes fewer trees from the rainforest because the nursery can provide firewood and poles for construction.

Not that we don't believe in catching them while they're young. WWF also organises special training courses to help teachers incorporate conservation into the curriculum.

Paris Acts To Assure Rwandans On Troops

Compiled by Our Siaff From Dispositions PARIS — Foreign Minister Alain Juppe said Sunday that France wanted to persuade the Tutsi-dominated Rwandan Patriotic Front that intended military intervention in Rwanda by French troops to halt ethnic massacres would not be aimed at the rebels.

"I want to underline the fact that we are making great efforts to convince the RPF that this operation is not aimed against them," Mr. Juppe said on TF1 television.

He said Paris was in contact with rebel leaders in Rwanda, and that other contacts were planned with the movement in New York and Paris.

The rebels, who are winning the war against the rival, Hutudominated government, dis-trust France. They say its hands are bloodied by support of the government of President Juvénal Habyarimana, killed in April in aircraft sabotage.

Fearing action by Paris is designed to deprive it of victory, the Rwandan Patriotic Front has said it will respond to French intervention by force.

Mr. Juppe insisted that France was neutral. He said France's move to halt massacres, which may have claimed up to a half-million lives could take place next week if the United Nations Security Council gave the go-ahead. He hoped other European countries would join, and recalled that Senegal had also committed itself to join the operation "while there is widespread support in Africa."

French military chiefs met here Sunday to complete planning for possible intervention, an army spokesman said. Jean-Michel Marland, the French ambassador to Rwanda, whose mission was closed nearly two months ago, will try to persuade leaders of the Rwanda Patriotic Front that opposes the French move, a Foreign Ministry spokesman said.

In Kigali, the Rwandan capital, the rebels say they will attack any peacekeeping troops sent by France, the United Nations commander said Sunday.

'The responses I've received from the RPF are very emphatic," said Major General Romeo Dallaire of Canada, referring to the Rwanda Patriotic Front rebels. "They would consider the French forces the enemy and target them accordingly."

But a spokesman said the operation would begin only when approved by the United Nations, where Paris distributed a draft resolution over the weekend, hoping for adoption on Tuesday by the Security Coun-

A well-informed source said it appeared likely that the jumping off point for French troops would be eastern Zaire.

French military planners said they might have to fight their way in and would be equipped appropriately.

The French planners spoke of an initial 1,000-man task force of professional soldiers with 600 infantrymen backed by 400 support troops including engineers and crews of helicopter gunships.

A second 1,000-man unit would be on stand-by, ready to move within 24 hours. The army has not said which units were picked for the mission but it has a choice of tough marine, paratroop and Foreign Legion units to choose from. France has sought to enlist

European and African allies in the venture, but only Senegal, whose army is close to the French military, is certain to take part, sources said.

President François Mitterrand said Saturday it would take "a matter of days and hours" for France and its former West African colonies to send troops to Rwanda, possibly via Zaire — the only border ing that this would recognize Rwandan government forces Aden's secession from its four-still control. WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration must decide soon on how rapidly to strengthen U.S. armed forces in South Korea to deter or, if necessary, repel an invasion by North Korea.

President Bill Clinton and his senior national security advisers are considering a package prepared by Defense Secretary William J. Perry that outlines options ranging from a modest increase in support troops to deployment of dozens of additional bombers and warships.

The pressure for new military moves has been mounting. Although Congress generally has supported Mr. Clinton's response to the refusal by North Korea to allow inspections of its nuclear facilities, some key Democrats and Republicans have begun to assert publicly that he is not doing enough to prepare for possible war. But officials said any decision probably would be delayed as the administration tries to untangle the results of the trip to North Korea by former President Jimmy Carter.

Pentagon officials said the military package presented to Mr. Clinton included these op-

North Korea were to invade.

Mr. Perry and General John M. Shalikashvili, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, have sent Patriot air-defense missiles to South Korea, along with artillery-locating radar and doz-ens of Apache helicopters, intended to replace aging Cobra gunships that American forces had been using.

Even so, except for the addition of the Patriots, the bulk of the U.S. effort has been modest and barely visible.

Senior administration officials have said that they have kept the effort low-key for two reasons: They want to avoid provoking the North Koreans, who have warned that the mere imposition of sanctions might set off a war. And they want to mollify South Korea, which fears that a mobilization would panic the country and hurt the

With W. Anthony Lake, Mr. Clinton's national security adviser, standing at his side, Mr. Carter declared: "As far as I'm concerned there are no unanswered questions. What I will do is confirm in writing with President Kim Il Sung our un-derstanding with him. I'll share this with American officials."

Responding at the White House, Assistant Secretary of State Robert L. Gallucci, the senior U.S. negotiator on Korea, said: "It may well be that President Carter has brought back something on which we can build."

"To now, there has been no detached, objective analysis of the project," said Neil Proto, a lawyer representing a group of authors and historians opposing the project. "The facts have only come from Virginia and Disney. The process now will yield disclosure of the real facts, hopefully, early enough to affect all major decisions made about this."

With so many of Virginia's political leaders supporting the Disney plan, which envisions hotels, shops, two golf courses and 2,281 residential units, opponents see federal involvement as their best and perhaps only chance to force Disney to build elsewhere.

The Ukrainian Ministry of Finance has conducted an audit of the transaction and ordered the state prosecutor to investigate Zemlya and Lyudi, a quasigovernmental entity that signed the deal, along with Ukraine's Ministry of Agriculture.

But no one expects the prosecutor to get far. Zemlya and Lyudi's chairman is Alexander Tkachenko, a powerful politician who is deputy speaker in Parliament and a hard-line Communist opposed to breaking up collective farms.

According to a Zeneca invoice, the company sold 195,527 bags of corn seed to Ukraine for $10,999,957. Only 10 percent of the seeds were suitable for Ukraine's shorter growing season, and more than half are still in a warehouse, Mr. Tkachenko said.

Another big component of the deal involved 200 combines made by Deere & Company and J.I. Case that were sold to Ukraine for $143,000 each, according to Zeneca's invoice and the government audit. They were purchased from Decre and Case for about $90,000 each, according to people who worked on the project.

The combines were first bought by Trans-Chemical in Miami, then immediately resold to Zeneca, and then sold to the Ukrainians. This allowed Trans-Chemical and Zeneca to share in a profit estimated at $10 million Mr. Tkachenko said he was unaware of the markup on the equipment. Zeneca refused to answer questions about the purchase and sale of the combines except to confirm that the transaction had been in three steps. Mr. Kapian of Trans-Chemi- aspects of doing business in germinate.

organization."

A perplexing aspect of the deal involved five Jeep Grand Cherokees and five Chevrolet Lumina minivans.

Doing business in the former Soviet Union routinely requires bribes, payoffs and dealings with criminal elements to complete a project involving a large amount of money.

Several Americans on the project said the vehicles were payoffs to Ukrainians. The Zeneca lawyer said the charges were "inappropriate specula-tion." He declined to say whether Zeneca or Trans-Chemical had purchased the vehicles Mr. Kaplan of Trans-Chemical said he could not remember. To steer the project through the Ukrainian bureaucracy, Trans-Chemical helped set up a company in Ukraine known as Trans Agro. According to the Ukraine government audit, several of the Jeeps and minivans went to Trans Agro.

Trans Agro's first managing director, Michael Vogeler, said in an interview that among those who got vehicles were Mr. Tkachenko, and Yevgeni Imas, another founder of Trans Agro.

Mr. Imas refused to answer questions and Mr. Tkachenko dismissed the questions about the cars as trivial. Mr. Kaplan said he was "clueless" as to why the vehicles went to Trans buy bags of seeds in which less Agro. Trans Agro says it has none of the cars.

Trans Agro, he said. Much of the Zeneca seed was developed to be planted in regions where the growing season exceeded 100 days, according to farmers who worked last year for Zeneca. Ukraine has several climatic regions and relatively short growing seasons of 90 to 100 days.

"There was every day a battle

"They should have come here for three years and carried out some studies before launching a project of this scale; that is the way it is done worldwide," said Mr. Sweere, of the American Chamber of Commerce, who is from a Minnesota farm family.

Not only were the seeds inappropriate but many were also bad, according to American farmers sent to Ukraine. Some of the seeds were so moldy it appeared they had been rotting in a warehouse.

The principal test of seed quality is germination, measured by the percentage of seeds in a bag that will sprout. Amerithan 92 to 95 percent of the seeds show promise of sprout-

After the Bubble Bursts, The Fallout Is Chilling

By Carl Gewirtz

ARIS — "The bursting of a financial bubble is always ugly," observes Sushii Wadhwani, London-based market strategist at Goldman, Sachs & Co. The bubble in question was the late 1993 rally in bond prices that drove yields on long-term debt in North America and Continental Europe 1901 seep in more than 20 years — levels that in retrogreet to lows not seen in more than 20 years — levels that, in retrospect, analysts agree were unsustainably low.

"Last year," Mr. Wadhwani said, "speculative money became overoptimistic about European monetary policy. They thought the Bundesbank was likely to ease policy by more than now seems likely, and as they got disappointed they began liquidating Fear of inflation

"Because the proportion of risks being a selftrading done by speculative money is higher than in the past, fulfilling prophecy. we have much more stop-loss selling than we typically have seen and that has meant self-feeding price falls.

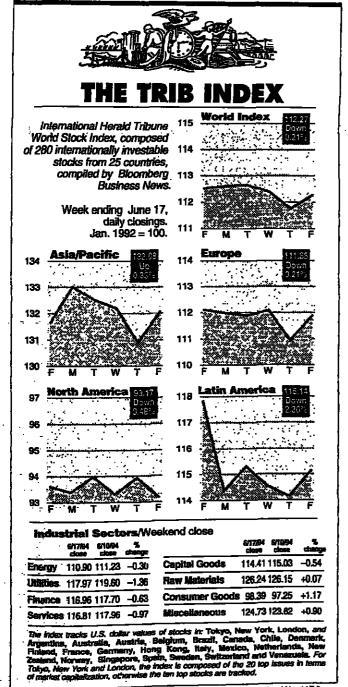

"Those falls, in turn, change the psychology of conventional investors who then think the market is telling them something that they have not factored in and you get a change in the perceptions

In the wake of the sell-off in European bond prices, attention has focused on large government budget deficits projected for this year. Although these are targeted to decline in the next two years, projections by the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development show that gross public debt by 1995 will have increased substantially — to 64 percent of gross domestic product in Germany from 49 percent last year, and the average for all of Europe will rise to 76.5 percent of gross domestic product from 67.6

For Mr. Wadhwani, this focus on projected deficits is nothing more than a rationalization. The projections are no worse than they were last year when bond markets rallied. But rationalization or not, he agrees that in the current environment it is becoming difficult for governments to finance their deficits.

Germany, Austria and Spain have recently been forced to cancel planned domestic bond offerings, and Britain this week will again be selling floating-rate debt rather than fixed-coupon paper to comply with the demands of the skittish market. Malcolm Roberts. London-based analyst for Union Bank of Switzerland, calculated that German government issuance was running 45 percent behind the year-ago pace and in Britain it is down 58 percent.

Few Fans Support Dollar

Bleak Outlook Follows Plunge

NEW YORK — When the smoke clears from the battlefield that was the foreign exchange market last week, dealers probably will be left with the impression that further dollar sales are the safest bet.

The coming together of a constellation of events on Friday sent the dollar plunging against a variety of European currencies, and many analysts and traders said the currency was likely to weaken further. A primary reason for the bleak outlook is the U.S. curto even a whiff of bad news. The dollar's tumble Friday vas partially caused by a prediction from a private economist that the U.S. currency would fall 10 percent against the mark over

rency's apparent vulnerability

the next 18 months. Currencies often rise or fall when central bankers or other government officials speak since they control monetary and economic policy. But the bearish outlook Friday came from Gail Fosler, chief economist at the Conference Board, a privately funded research group with no ties to the U.S. government. We had a lot of calls from European customers asking what the Conference Board was," said Win Thin, interna-tional economist at MCM Cur-rencyWatch, a consulting firm. The timing of the forecast dded to the confusion. Ms. Fosler's comments crossed newswires just as the dollar was falling through 1.6270 DM, an important level for people who trade based on technical analysis of exchange rates, said Ben Morden, an analyst at IDEA, a consulting firm. Breaking through that level means the dollar's slide is likely to continue, Mr. Morden said.

That the dollar fell so far at least partially on comments from a nongovernment economist shows that the beleaguered currency is weaker than many traders had thought

"This shows that the dollar is very vulnerable," said Tom Hutchinson, director of capital See DOLLAR, Page 11

World Bank Draws Fire Babbling Technocrats or Unsung Heros?

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches WASHINGTON - While the World Bank is accusing developing countries of squander-ing funds on lavish projects rather than alleviating poverty, a chorus of critics is charging the leading institution with hurting the very poor it was founded to help.

By most common measures, living stan-dards have improved in the developing world since the Bank was formed 50 years ago. But now the Bank - which provides cheap capital and technical expertise to developing countries — is being challenged to show it deserves much credit for that progress.

The Bank has done more damage than good," said Ross Hammond, a spokesman for 50 Years Is Enough, a coalition of more than 50 organizations lobbying for deep reductions in funding to the Bank. The alliance, made up mostly of such left-leaning development, environmental and religious groups as Oxfam America, Friends of the Earth and Greenpeace USA, charges that Bank policies "uproot and further impoverish the poor" and "plunder the environment."

In its annual World Development Report, released Sunday, the Bank acknowledged that the poor were not benefiting from many of the infrastructure projects it has funded. But it placed the blame on the governments of developing countries rather than on itself, calling for a scaling back of bureaucracies and an increase in privatization.

Yet its detractors say Bank officials have not learned enough, painting a grim picture of a multinational bureaucracy run amok — a secretive, bloated institution run by overpaid, jargon-babbling technocrats more interested in defending turf than tending to the poor.

Leftist critics charge that Bank lending encourages Third World governments to pursue ruthless export-oriented development strategies that enrich the elite, while pushing low-income inhabitants deeper into poverty. Critics on the right say Bank loans crowd out private capital and destroy incentives for gov-ernments to adopt free-market policies.

Groups on both sides attack the World Bank for propping up authoritarian regimes and throwing too much money at grandiose infrastructure projects — dams, highways, power plants — that have displaced millions of poor people.

Environmentalists, meanwhile, allege the Bank has squandered billions on projects that have ravaged the Earth's forests and wildlife. "If some evil genius were to devise the most cost-effective way to provoke large-scale deforestation, this would be it," Bruce Rich, a lawyer at the Environmental Defense Fund. said of Bank-sponsored projects in Brazil, Indonesia, Thailand and India.

These attacks come at an awkward time for the Bank, which extended a record $23.7 billion in loans to more than 100 countries last year and manages a loan portfolio totaling $140 billion.

Bank officials say they are moving quickly to address the organization's problems. The Bank now allows outsiders greater access than before to the information officials use to evaluate new projects.

The emphasis everywhere must be less on cutting ribbons to open new facilities and

Unexpectedly, Chairman Quits Philip Morris

Michael A. Miles abruptly resigned as chairman and chief executive officer of Philip Morris Cos. and will be replaced by two long-time executives from the tobacco division of the conglomerate, the company said Sunday.

Mr. Miles, who had headed Kraft when it was acquired by

USX Decision Likely To Limit Steel Prices

PITTSBURGH — USX-U.S. Steel Group, the largest American steel maker, said it would not raise carbon steel prices for the third time this year, despite heavy demand and a competitor's move last week to increase prices by $20 a ton in October.

Don Herring, a spokesman for USX Corp., U.S. Steel's parent, said Friday the steel producer would not match the 3 percent price increase announced last week by Ohio-based AK Steel Corp., the sixth-largest American steelmaker.

Analysts said the decision by USX-U.S. Steel, would make it difficult for AK Steel's price rise to stick.

AK Steel was formerly Armco Steel Co., a joint venture of Armco Inc. and Kawasaki Steel Corp. It became a public company earlier this year, with Kawasaki maintaining a 20 percent stake and Armco keeping 4 percent.

Despite the strongest market in 15 years because of the U.S.

economy's recovery and a boom in auto production, analysts predicted that a third round of base price increases was unlikely without USX's participation. USX-U.S. Steel and its rivals previously raised their prices for flat-rolled carbon sheet products by about 3 percent in January and an additional 2 percent effective next month, Flatrolled carbon sheet is used for auto bodies and appliances. But USX's decision not to raise prices lessens the chances the next four largest producers - Bethlehem Steel Corp., LTV Corp., National Steel Corp. and Inland Steel Industries would follow AK Steel's lead. (Reuters, Bloomberg)

Inflation Gloom Shrouds Market

NEW YORK - U.S. credit markets are likely to remain under pressure after last week's pummeling amid inflation fears spurred by rising commodity prices, econmists and analysts said.

While most economists said they did not expect the Federal Reserve Board to raise

U.S. CREDIT MARKETS

interest rates immediately, a number of Fed watchers said the central bank could not afford to ignore the seemingly unstoppable rise in commodities prices Persistent weakness in the dollar also should be worrying members of the policy making Federal Open Market Committee as they prepare for their semiannual two-day meeting set for July 5-6, analysts said. "The Fed is bound to be upset at the Bannon, an analysi at the consulting firm The Fed is scheduled to release its socalled Tan Book report on regional eco-dollar drop, and to have some concern about commodity prices," said Robert part of June on Wednesday, and the market will be closely scanning the data for any signs of inflation.

The report carries somewhat more weight than usual since it was prepared for the FOMC meeting and comes before the semiannual Humphrey-Hawkins address Congress by Alan Greenspan, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board.

Inflation at the producer and consumer levels has been fairly well contained this year, but it is not showing signs of heading lower either, Mr. Bannon said, mainly because long-depressed energy prices are moving higher.

The outlook for a fifth Fed rate tightening this year has shifted back and forth in recent weeks. In late May, a majority of analysts expected the Fed to move again; then, lackluster economic data for May led many to think the Fed would wait and see how the economy responded to a tighter

But the Fed may not have the luxury to wait much longer now that the dollar is weakening to the point of threatening the nomic conditions for most of May and stability of U.S. assets and capital markets. "The dollar and the long bond have played off each other lately, with each side thinking the other one is the driving force," Mr. Bannon said.

Rising prices and a falling dollar is a lethal combination because it "smells like inflation," said James Hale, senior fixedincome strategist at MMS International in San Francisco.

That combination already has taken a toll. Last week, the yield on the benchmark 30-year Treasury bond rose 14 basis points, or about 2,1 percent, to finish Friday at 7.45 percent.

The yield was 6.3 percent before the Fed began raising rates in February. On May 11, the bond's yield reached 7.66 percent, the highest since November 1992. The record low yield is 5.77 percent, reached on Oct. 15.

Chances that bonds will rally are slim because people are taking advantage of any upticks in bond prices to sell their holdings, said Ray Goodner at IDS Financial Services in Minneapolis.

Merrill To Lend Own Funds

NEW YORK - Merrill Lynch & Co., the biggest U.S. securities firm, said it would start putting up its own capital to make bank loans.

The firm said Friday it had hired three bankers from Chemical Banking Corp.'s loan syndication business to lead a group that will make loans and syndicate them, or sell parts of the loans to other lenders.

Merrill, which refused to provide details of its plans, had reduced its lending business after loans it made to finance clients' acquisitions soured in 1989. Bad loans contributed to the firm's $213 million loss that year.

A spokesman said that Merrill wanted to expand its lending business to provide "onestop shopping" to clients who might also want to sell stocks, bonds or arrange takeovers.

Merrill Lynch had $5.5 billion of stockholders equity at the end of last year.

Merrill's announcement follows a similar move by CS First Boston, whose syndicated loan business will be financed by its affiliate, Credit Suisse, Switzerland's largest bank.

Not So Sweet: Navratilova's Long Good-Bye

By Robin Finn
New York Times Service

EASTBOURNE, England - Careering across the English countryside with a friend's foundling mongrel in the passenger seat and yet another loss in the rear-view mirror, Martina Navratilova, a classic herself as well as an avid reader of the genre, couldn't help

remembering something Shakespeare once said about parting being such sweet sorrow. If that's true, then why, wondered the 37year-old Wimbledon diva, has her muchballyhooed leave-taking of tennis this year been packed with sorrow and absolutely devoid of sweetness?

Her latest devastation, a very premature quarterfinal exit in Eastbourne considering her 11 titles here, sent her racing through a blur of tears into the locker room to accuse herself of perhaps being greedy and playing one year too many. She calmed down when her companion, Danda Jarolimek, suggested it was better to play one year too many than ing problem: With Eastbourne a bust and tuneup sessions with the previous week's practice partners, Steffi Graf and Jim Courier, no longer possible, how could she suffi-ciently mend her splintered confidence in time to turn in an edifying two weeks at Wimbledon — which begins Monday — on her 22d and final visit? Navratilova, having won Wimbledon, that grandest validator of the Grand Slam quartet, a record nine times in 21 appearances, feels it only honest to admit "it will take a miracle" to reign supreme at her most cherished venue one last time.

If she, great Grand Slam war horse that she is, comes out of the gate at Wimbledon like the hobbled horse who stumbled in the first round of the French Open last month, Navratilova thinks she may put herself out to pasture six months ahead of schedule.

"I'm nervous, how else can I feel?" she said, with ice on her racquet wrist but no fire in the disturbingly lukewarm arsenal of shots that's threatening to turn her swan song into

Wimbledon. I'm putting everything into it because I know if I save anything. I won't win, and if I do well, maybe I'll have the energy to get through the rest of the year." And what if she doesn't do well at Wimbledon, the tournament this vegetarian calls

'the meat" of her year? "Losing makes you unhappy, and if I keep losing, what's the point in playing the rest of the year; it's just too painful," she said in her first admission that her plan to play a full 1994 schedule could be in jeopardy.

"My hope is high; my expectation is zero," said Navratilova, humble words from a champion with 18 Grand Slam singles crowns among her record 168 singles titles, a champion who, despite being twice the age of many of her opponents, continues to be ranked fourth over all.

"I have to deal with my fear of failure; there is no failure for me at Wimbledon," she said. seizing on her latest mantra from Billie Jean King her mentor who was summoned by urday consultation and practice session.

It's not that Navratilova believes she can't win a 10th Wimbledon title; it is her fondest wish to reach the final and meet Graf there, a nonsecret she shared with the top-ranked Graf when they practiced in London. Keeping herself afloat through the previous six rounds is what worries Navratilova. "I thought this year would be different than last year, that I'd enjoy it more because I wouldn't have to worry about having anything left for later," she said. "But Billie Jean told me it was going to be exactly the opposite, lt's very cruel. It's very unkind. And win or lose, it's very exhausting. It's like feeling you're always going against the wind. Some days it's a struggle just to make myself play." But at Wimbledon, that special spot where every year she purious a few blades of Center Court grass and pockets them for good luck, Navratilova won't have trouble finding the motivation to play. Or to win.

"I'm hoping to lose myself in the atmo-

York would have a National Basketball Association championship to go with its National

Simpson's Fans Face The Unimaginable

By Tony Kornheiser ington Post Service

WASHINGTON — Even after nearly a week of reading it over and over in the papers, seeing that footage of him being handcuffed over and over on TV, hearing he was the prime suspect over and over on radio, it doesn't sink in. It still is unbelievable, unimaginable, un-thinkable that O.J. Simpson could have committed murder.

Not someone as successful and celebrated and admired as O.J.

The latest turns, that O.J. ran away, left behind what sounded ominously like a suicide note, and the extraordinary, mesmerizing convoy — something like the Spielberg movie "Sugarland Express" — of Al Cowlings's white Bronco being trailed by a phalanx of police cars for 50 miles (80 kilometers) on a Los Angeles

freeway, and cheered on by a movable feast of onlookers all the way up to his house in Brentwood, with O.J. in the back and said to be holding a gun to his head - made the whole, unreal scenario more People such as O.J. don't commit murder and go on the lam - except on TV. Scriptwriters make that stuff up. It doesn't actually happen in real life.

We have seen his sweet face for 25 years now, growing screnely more hand-some and pleasant every time he went on camera. Now they throw this new spin at us, that he has been charged with double murder, slitting his former wife's throat and stabbing a man repeatedly to death —acts of such furious violence they scare us to contemplate. Moreover, he had fled. And this is so incompatible with our comfortable view of O.J. that it causes real personal pain and disillusionment. We yearn for our star athletes to always be the gods we see on the playing fields. Let them be better than us, because we fail. Don't let them fail too.

We shouldn't do it, of course. But they're so seductive out there on the fields of glory. The great ones, the Pete Roses. the Magic Johnsons, the O.J. Simpsons, become part of our family somehow, though we never even meet them.

When Magic said he had the AIDS virus, grown men and women cried in the street. Now, seeing O.J. charged with these unspeakably horrible murders, we are short of breath and sad. Sad for Nicole Simpson, sad for Ron Goldman, sad for Sydney and Justin Simpson - and sad too for O.J.

we've invested emotionally in him over the years. We build them up too high, they have to let us down. In a way we never let our star athletes become whole people. We want them always there like we knew them once, running up the far sideline, cutting back across the middle, dashing 64 yards, no one laying a glove on them. The Juice we all knew couldn't do what he's accused of. He was a lion among men, a great and brave runner with quicksilver moves, a self-effacing man who gave credit to the linemen who blocked for him.

In movies, particularly of late, he took the pratfalls that were all the funnier graceful. As a TV sideline reporter (and even now, 15 years after the end of his career, he looked so good, like all you had to do was hand him the football and nobody would catch him), the camera would zoom in on him, and he would be smiling that great smile of his, the one we've seen at USC and Buffalo and running through airports, O.J.'s wide, satisfied smile, and good laugh, as if nobody owned a better life than he did.

But we didn't really know him, did we? We couldn't have loved him if we thought these charges were true.

We all have secrets. We all have limits. We all have points at which we can no longer hold on. You think you know somebody because you sit next to him in a locker room or you see him on TV, or you live on his block. But you don't know

People will talk about the dark side of O.J. Simpson now, the times he beat his wife. And wife-beating is a terrible thing. But it is short of murder. They will say O.J. is a violent man, trained in a violent game. But there are thousands of football players, and they haven't been charged with murder.

How could anybody do this? How could be do this?

These crimes are so hideous, so seemingly obsessive that no amount of pop psychology will let us reconcile them. Obsession and passion are combustible together; they're the chemicals you mix in high-school lab, and they blow up and shatter the glass you stirred them in.

MAN WE THOUGHT we knew Aapparently went crazy. We don't know why. There are men who go to church and mow their lawns and work in air-conditioned offices, and one day they come home and shoot their wives and children, and nobody ever knows why. It is more stunning with the charges against OJ. because he has been under public scrutiny for so many years now, and always seemed so comfortable in the spotlight; so affable, so pleased with being O.J. Simpson.

When I watch the newscasts and the people from the police department refer to "Mr. Simpson" it diminishes him in size, it reduces him to mortal level. They stand on the podium and dryly call him, "Mr. Simpson, the suspect," or "Mr. Simpson, the accused," or "Mr. Simpson, the fugitive." The way they say it, without awe, without reverence, it makes me accept that this Mr. Simpson may have committed these awful crimes.

When his attorneys and friends call him "O.J." though, Lifeel the mythology. I see him larger than life. I see him break-A T THE SAME TIME we feel being loose for those signature touchdowns that won the Heisman, I see him going over 2,000 yards in the snow against the Jets, I see him hurdling through the airport in the Hertz commercials, I see him there on the sideline in the NBC blazer, smiling that mountainous smile. When I hear him called "O.J.," I cannot think that he might be a monster seizing the mother of his children - and stabbing her repeatedly to death.

Sunday was Father's Day in the United States, a day when children should be with their dad. Who was going to go to those beautiful children, to 9-year-old Sydney and 6-year-old Justin Simpson, and say to them: Your mother is dead. and your father is accused of killing her?

Els of South Africa watched the ball after putting on No. 3, which he only parred.

Els, Montgomery, Roberts in Playoff

OAKMONT, Pennsylvania - South

Africa's Ernie Els, Scotland's Colin Montgomerie and Loren Roberts finished tied for the lead Smday after the final round of the 94th U.S. Open golf championship. The three will compete Monday in an 18-hole playoff to determine a winner. A victory by Els or Montgomerie would be the first by a non-U.S. golfer since 1981 and only the fourth by an international player since 1927.

Montgomerie lugged his chunky frame through the sweltering heat at Oakmont Country Club and made three birdies on the front nine to take the lead halfway through Sunday's final round of the U.S. Open.

The Scotsman was 7 under par after 63 holes, one stroke ahead of third-round leader Ernie Els of South Africa and Loren Roberts going to the final nine holes.

If the 30-year-old Montgomerie can hold on, he will be the first foreign player to win the Open since Australian David Graham in 1981, and only the fourth since Montgomerie started the day at 4 under, three strokes behind Els, but turned the front nine in 33 to Els' 37. Roberts also started the round at 4 under and shot 34, 2 under par.

Curtis Strange was at 5 under after 63 holes. New Zealander Frank Nobilo was 4 under. Tom Watson, Steve Pate and Clark Dennis were 2 under heading to the final nine holes, along with Hale Irwin, whose hopes for a fourth Open title were seriously hurt by a double bogey on the fifth hole.

No one among the earlier finishers managed to do better than par for 72 holes. Duffy Waldorf was in the clubhouse with Els got a break on the first hole when he drove into the deep left rough but was given a free drop because a TV tower obstructed his shot. He managed to get it on the green but three-putted from about 40 feet for a bogey. He got that stroke back with a birdie on the par-5 fourth hole and made pars until he bogeyed the par-3 eighth hole when he drove into the rough.

Romania's Hagi Stuns Colombia

By Lisa Dillman Los Angeles Times Service

PASADENA, California — Goalkeeper Oscar Cordoba was not supposed to cause hearts to pound wildly or faces to flush among Colombian soccer fans. No. this was no clone of the brazen René Higuita. who would cockily saunter out 20 yards from his goal and flirt with danger.

But on Saturday, the normally reliable Cordoba caused Higuita-like reactions from the huge Colombian contingent among the crowd of 91.856. He committed two significant miscues that led to goals. and Romania stunned Colombia. 3-1. in the first World Cup game to be played at the Rose Bowl.

The Romanian forward Florin Raducioiu scored twice and the often brilliant midfielder Gheorghe Hagi had a hand in every goal, scoring once and setting up both of Raducioiu's goals. Bogdan Stelea. the goalkeeper, was nearly flawless, stopping 18 shots, iacluding a point-blank ef-fort by midfielder Fredy Eusebio Rincon from six yards out in the 23d minute with Romania ahead, 1-0.

For the moment, one of the pre-World Cup favorites. Colombia, is looking less than formidable, ranking last in Group A. It plays the United States at the Rose Bowl

Colombia was permitted to pass the ball around at will in the nonthreatening parts of the field, but the Romanians opened with a 5-3-2 alignment and, holding a 2-1 lead, switched to a 6-2-2 in the 68th minute, when defender Tibor Selvmes replaced midfielder llie Dumitrescu.

Additionally, Colombia's star forward. Faustine Asprilia, could not seem to go anywhere in the second half without seeing the shadow of defender Daniel Produn or feel a tug on his shirt. And the playmaking midfielder Carlos Valderrama was a nonfactor save for a few showy first-half moves. Although Colombia had near complete

The U.S. and Switzerland Swelter to a 1-1 Draw That Nobody Wanted

By Jere Longman New York Times Service

PONTIAC, Michigan - This was supposed to be the spark that started a soccer brushfire, the United States opening the World Cup with a victory and opening the eyes of the American public.

Well, neither did the United States win on Saturday nor convert many nonbelievers in the first World Cup game ever played indoors. But considering they were thoroughly outplayed in the midfield, their star forward, Eric Wynalda, was suffering from an allergic reaction, and they ran out of gas when the temperature reached 106 degrees (41 degrees celsius) on the floor of the un-air-conditioned Pontiac Silverdome, the Americans could have done a lot worse than a 1-1 draw with Switzerland.

"In a nutshell, we played badly and got a point," said midfielder John Harkes. A tie is worth a point, and the last time the United States accumulated any points ability to self-destruct.

in the World Cup was 1950. Four years ago, the Americans lost, 5-1, to Czechoslovakia in the opener: Saturday's draw must be considered an improvement. Whether it is enough of an improvement to advance beyond group play against Switzerland. Colombia, and Romania is another matter.

'We're still alive," said Bora Milutinovic. the Serb who coaches the Americans.

Alive, yes, but barely, thanks to a splendid free kick by Wynalda to tie the score in the final minute before halftime.

Still, the Americans need a first-round victory to join the 15 other teams that will advance to the single-elimination portion of the tournament. Realistically, Switzerland figured to be their best chance for a victory. Colombia, one of the tournament favorites, appears to be out of the Americans' league. That leaves Romania, an impetuous team loaded with talent and the

"We came here hoping to get 3 points." said defender Alexi Lalas, referring to the standing. "We're not happy with the result. but there's nothing we can do about it now. I thought we played well at times, but we played defense much too much."

In the 45th minute, just before the first half drifted into injury time. Harkes made a threatening run on the dribble and was tackled by Swiss midfielder Ciri Sforza. setting up a free kick for the Americans. Wynalda was selected even though he had awakened Friday morning covered with hives, apparently having suffered an allergie reaction to something he ate.

I had reactions like this when I was a kid to certain foods." Wynalda said, "I was really feeling fatigued."

Team doctors gave him allergy medicine, but Wynalda slept little Friday night. His hands and legs were red and swollen on Saturday, and he said he felt itchy and numb. He vomited before the game, and there was some question as to whether he would play.

"But this is the World Cup," Wynalda said. "No way I wasn't going to play." The free kick was set up from 28 yards, and Wynalda hit a wicked shot that kept hooking and sinking away from the Swiss goalie Marco Pascolo. No one blamed Pascolo. He could do nothing. This was a perfect shot, and the ball nicked the underside of the crossbar as it found its way into the net to tie the score at 1-1.

Four years ago, an impetuous Wynalda had been ejected from the World Cup opener for shoving a nettlesome Czech player named Lubomir Moravcik. But seasoning in Germany's Bundesliga has given him self-assurance and, more important, self-control.

"I was almost in disbelief." Wynaida said of his goal. "It was the greatest goal of

A free kick was set up from 19 yards, and Georges Bregy put a shot over a disorganized American wall, past a screened Tony Meola, the U.S. goalkeeper. The defensive wall had aligned itself only 6 yards from the ball, instead of the required 10, and when the Americans were forced to the back they fell out of alignment. push back, they fell out of alignment. 12 Mexican Fans Die in Crash of Private Jet

The Associated Press

CHANTILLY, Virginia - A plane carrying Mexican soccer fans to the World Cup crashed while approaching Dulles International Airport in heavy fog Saturday, killing all 12 people

Carl Vogt, chairman of the National Transportation Safety Board, said the jet missed one approach to the airport and was attempting a second when it went down in a heavily wooded area on airport property.

"There's no one alive," Vogt said. A makeshift morgue was set up nearby and the bodies were to be transported to a Virginia medical examiner's facility in northern Virginia, police spokesmen

José Henonin, a spokesman for the private, commercial chartering company TAESA in Mexico City, said the plane was an Executive Learjet with two crewmen and 10 passengers. He said the pas-sengers were headed to Washington for World Cup soccer.

He said the plane left Mexico City on Friday evening and made a three-hour fueling stop in New Orleans. Dulles Airport is west of Washington.

Henonin said the plane was chartered for $1,500 by José Luis Garza Hernández, owner of a private financial company, to take his family to Washington for the Mexico-Norway game Sunday.

The Mexican Embassy in Washington said the victims included three teenagers, three younger children, two men and two women.

Police and rescue workers with dogs combed the wreckage area, about four miles south of the airport's main terminal. Bulldozers had to be brought in to clear a path for rescue teams.

South Korea Pulls Out a Tie With Spain

By Elliott Almond

DALLAS - In a match filled with controversy, intrigue, and a dramatic comeback, South Korea did not wait long to stun the soccer world on a steamy evening in Texas.

Playing with a man advantage from the 26th minute on the underrated Korea turned a seemingly devastating defeat into a surprising draw, tying Spain, 2-2, before 56,247 at the Cotton Bowl on Friday, the first day of the World Cup.

In a most improbable first-round game. Spain once again enhanced its unenviable reputation as a World Cup underachiever. It was South Korea's second draw in nine Cup matches, the first since it tied Bulgaria in 1986. The South Koreans have never won in this tournament, but by earning a point in Group C on Friday, they have a good chance of advancing to the second round for the first time.

Spain, meanwhile, expecting to cruise into the second round, needs to regroup. Spain's demise came about slowly and painfully with temperatures in the 90s (30s centigrade), melting the undermanned team in the closing minutes. Spain's fatigued and weakened defenders gave up two goals when their legs could no longer keep up with the pressing Koreans.

Seo Jung Won, a veteran of the 1990 World Cup and the '92 Barcelona Olympic Games, tied the score in extra time after Hong Myung Bo beat a Spanish defender and passed to his unmarked teammate inside the penalty area.

Hong scored minutes earlier on a free kick that deflected off the feet of Spanish shot again. It was blocked, but Camineto defenders in front of the goal. The response got the rebound and dribbled to his ught. bounding ball caught goalkeeper Jose Canizares by surprise.

Although it did not reap any benefits for a long time. South Korea's resurrection began in the 26th minute after a controversial call by the referce. Peter Mikkelsen of Denmark. Miguel Nadal was ejected after stopping a scoring threat by Ko Jeong Woon just outside the penalty area.

Nadal, Spain's captain and perhaps its most versatile midfielder, made a hard sliding tackle, but it was questionable whether it was a professional foul, a penalty committed deliberately to stop a striker from getting a clear run on the goal. Such a foul results in immediate ejection.

"The red card slowed down the pace of the game and strategies had to be changed," said Juan Goikoetxea, a Spanish midfielder.

With Nadal's absence. Spain lost its presence for the rest of the first half. But spectacular goals in the 51st and 56th minutes renewed Spain's verve, despite playing a man short.

The first goal came from forward Júlio Salinas and some fancy footwork from Spain's midfielders. José Luis Caminero, a second-half substitute, set up the goal by beating the South Korean defense inside the penalty area. He sent a nice pass to Goikoetxea, whose crossing pass went to a sliding Salinas in front of the goal.

Inspired by that score, Spain went on the offensive and pressured the Koreans. Finally, Salinas broke free and tried a nice shot that was saved by goalkeeper Choi In Young. But Salinas got the ball back and

He tried two hard blasts that hit defenders then crossed it to Goikoetzen after controlling the second rebound. Goikoettes took the high ball and headed it in behind the outstretched arms of Choi.

Coach Javier Clemente figured the game was in hand and replaced Salines seven minutes later with Felipe Minambres, a younger player whose expertise is defense.

It was a sound move until Fernando Hierro suffered a slight leg injury in the 76th minute and sat down for five minutes before returning. The once dormant South Korea suddenly came to life.

"In the last 15 minutes, with Fernando injured, the team just lost its strength. Clemente said.

It was enough to give Korea a boost "We figured we were down two golds, let's go out and attack," Seo said. "What have we got to lose?" As it turned out, nothing, Clemente said his team was emotional drained from the experience. Spain mes mat and usually has little trouble holding big leads.

They're demoralized because we had it won," he said. "They are a bit down, a bit stunned.

Clemente said losing Nadal changed the color of the match "Playing with 10 men is very tough," he said. "At the end we were tremendously tired. We couldn't keep the Koreans out because we simply couldn't bear the pres

Parking Lot 18: A Major Melting Pot

By Joe Sexton New York Times Service

EAST RUTHERFORD, New Jersey — The spiritual epicenter of multiculturalism moved to parking lot No. 18. There were Irish, Italians, unapologetic capitalists, and tailgate anarchisis. The state police drove squad cars through the heat and hailstorms of soccer balls. National flags were raised over cars and the international tug of television had people climbing into their trunks to stare at miniscreens protected from the sun's glare.

The melting pot might never have quite boiled like this be-

"It's a shame the rest of the country hasn't figured out this is what's happening," said Jeff DeLuca, a soccer referee from Philadelphia

DeLuca, wearing an "Italia" shirt, managed to make it up the tumpike without injuring his passenger, a man named Mike Moran who wore a different set of tricolors across his chest. And the day's first bit of combat backgrounded some-what conneally by a blaring public address system playing It's a Small World" — was the subtle light for national control of parking lot No. 18. Irish flags dominated certain quadrants, Italian flags others. And then there were the modest footholds gained by accidental insurgents such as the Colombians.

"Hey, we got our tickets in a lottery," said Francisco Rodriguez, who sat discreetly with his relatives from Bogota and East Brunswick. "Colombia wound up in Los Angeles. We wound up here. But it's a global sport. And this is a once in a lifetime .chance

There was even the adjoining parking lot presence of a park named Amnsements of America for the use of fans after the game. Hey, what's more American to offer the visitors from Capri and Killarney than rides on the Gravitron? The schedule for the night included racing pigs and hypnotists.

His commitment to the carpentry business he set up nine years ago can be seen in the airy store filled with intricately inlayed furniture and sculpted objects. And in the triumphant tour of America he has just done with the 25 limited-edition huunidors he made for Alfred Dunhill. The dollhouse-size boxes, selling at £9.500 apiece, were a sellout in New York and went on to three more American cities and to Hong Kong. At last month's London launch, even Princess Diana, who supposedly banned smokers from her home at Kensington Palace, turned out to support her estranged husband's cousin.

Linley, 33, has succeeded in tapping into traditional British taste while giv ing his furniture and objects a veneer of "I am not really a 'trend' person."

That does not mean making reproduction furniture, but designing objects based on the architectural principles of the past that are shown in the linear watercolors that are part of each private commission. But he emphasizes the importance to his own business of his role as designer and team leader to the 20 craftsmen in his workshops in Gloucestershire and 15 independent specialists.

"What I have tried to do is to get the message across with a design point of view," he says. "You can make a beautiful piece of furniture, but if the design doesn't work it is a waste of craftsmanship.

His fascination with wood started when he was a 15-year-old pupil at the art-conscious school his parents chose for him. While preparing for a woodwork exam, he made a walnut box that his grandmother, the Queen Mother, now "keeps cigars in." He began to appreciate the complexity of joinery. the mitering, dovetailing, the "work-shop teases," the pleasure of "things going perfectly together."

Marquetry and complex inlay have become the benchmarks of David Linley Furniture at the shop on Pimlico Road in London, A classic console table might be inlaid with woods that sound as though they have been felled in some enchanted forest: burr ash, macassar ebony, solid oak and sycamore. The same tactile appeal and refined taste is applied to gift objects like wooden candlesticks selling at £35, lamp bases or a $10 carved egg.

"Wood as a material is easily understood - it is basically a tree chopped up," says Linley. "You can take people miles away, but the more urban we get. wood is still a material that everybody knows from inside themselves. People have a natural affinity to wood. It is not cold, it is warm. It has feel appeal unlike metal or plastic.'

The Dunhill humidors are three-dimensional homages to five classical masters who shaped the history of English architecture: Inigo Jones, who favored Renaissance classicism; the Palladian exponent William Kent; Augustus Pugin, the founding father of the Victorian Gothic revival and creator of the Houses of Parliament: John Soane, whose soaring arches inspired London's landmark red telephone ki-signed St. Paul's Cathedral. Each box has a smaller offspring, selling at £1,500, which uses a motif (a classic urn, a Gothic window or moulding) borrowed from the original. The project, which took just a year to complete, dovetails the artistic. upper-crust image of Linley with the origins of Dunhill as a smoker's para-

Linley is inevitably accused of trading on the royal connection that he says he has "always tried to ignore." He calls his mother, who would keep his furniture in the hall of her palace apart-ments in his early days. "one of our best salespersons.

He also praises his father, Lord Snowdon, for "starting it all off." Linley studied woodcraft under the direction of John Makepeace, Britain's premier furniture designer. What might have seemed a whimsical career choice in the yuppie 1980s, now seems prescient and part of a burgeoning interest in craft in England, not unlike the late Victorian movement.

But the Arts and Crafts revival of 100 years ago was based on a dislike of industrial mechanization and a less than worldly outlook on life," says

Linley is modest about the claim, expressed by the aesthete Sir Roy Strong, that the meticulously crafted furniture will be "the antiques of tomorrow." He admits to "the same processes that have been used for hundreds of years" and says that "hopefully" his own creations will be

Down in Flames Among the Netties

By William Safire

WASHINGTON — In David Ignatius's bone-chilling new post-Cold War suspense novel, The Bank of Fear," one character in the search for Saddam Hussein's hidden wealth is a computer gurn. "Her idea of fun," the reader is told. "was roaming the Internet bulletin boards and flaming people she didn't like."

The author, an editor steeped in the lore of the Middle East, has evidently spent long hours in the company of creative hackers researching the techniques of computer-directed heists. Among that set of nervous netties, flaming is a hot word. Though some hackers claim the verb (and its noun, flamage) was coined in the early 1970s, the earliest use on the Dialog retrieval system is from a June 1987 issue of PC Week: "The quickness of response available with E-mail may lead to flaming." Robert Kelley noted, "where people impul-sively react to a message and send uncensored, emotionally laden and often derogatory return messages — a practice that is almost non-existent in paper writing."

The earliest Nexis citation, from MacWeek in June 1989, reinforces the hurried connotation: "E-mail sent in anger, and usually in haste, is called flaming."

We've all written a furious letter, looked it over, then decided not to send it at all. Writing other word was too tachy. unsent letters is a fine way to ventilate hot feelings without triggering nuclear exchanges, but it requires the planned use of "snail mail."

The net set has no such fail-safe system. "Rapid-fire wordmeisters often prefer to communicate via E-mail." Stephen Wilbers wrote in The Minneapolis Star Tribune recently, ". . . and their inflammatory messages have been nicknamed flame mail." He later identified one letter to himself as the "most searing flame mail," which called him a "self-serving, arrogant windbag."

The word is in global use, as befits the network. In Britain, Clancy Sigal in The Guardian observes the "heady frontier freedom that is remarkably democratic if you don't mind brushing cibows with the unseen post-pubescent sixthformers . . . and the flame-out artists who specialize in joyful adolescent invective." (Flameout, a 1950 term for jet engine failure, preceded the hacker verb to flame by two decades,) "Netiquette frowns on flaming," says Jack Cushman of The New York Times, my in-house Internet expert. He equates the use of all capital letters (sometimes used in flaming) with shouting, and finds it the sign of the clueless newbie. one new to the net. Another breach of netiquette: excessive cross-posting, asking for information in a number of forums, which sometimes brings a flaming response. And before asking a basic question, the polite nettie "FAQ-checks"; that's looking up "Frequently Asked Questions" before posting a query. It's computer communica-tions courtesy, and Judith Martin — Miss Mancyberboor flames her out. Far be it from me, a professional vituremtor during the week, to decry the use of invertive; vet I have to admit that the old system of paper writing," to use the new ret-ronym, had an advantage over instantaneous E-mail. Rather than look back to the old, slow days, let us look aftered. The trick will be to develop software that builds in a delay to your E-mail when it spots a finerword. "I'm going to miss the word telegraph," says Joe Gemignani, the New York Times Sunday business copy chief. The word was born from the French telegraphe in 1794, denoting a semaphore apparatus, a manual signaling device: tele-is Greek for "far," and graphein Greek for "to

The co-inventor of the nautical flag system dubbed it the tachygraphe, from the Greek for "rapid," but a French diplomat smoothly renamed it telegraphe, presumably because the

The exciting technical word was adopted as part of the name of a forward-looking American corporation in 1885. The American Telephone and Telephone and Telegraph Corp. soon became known as "American Tel and Tel," which was further clipped to its initials "AT&T."

The informal shortening of the old nomenciature was not good enough for the 1990s board of directors. Although telephone is still a live word.

"While over the years the name achieved a distinctive place in the annals of corporate America," the with-it directors recently wrote to stockholders, "it is also associated with old ways and outdated technologies. Despite some reclings of nostalgia" - with Samuel F. B. Mouse vainly tapping out an SOS from his grave— the board believes it is appropriate at this time to adopt as the company's name the initials AT&T." Stockholders were assured that "the new name - AT&T Corp. - will shed the dated imagery associated with the past." New York Times Service
